Starting from Cultural Exchange Multicultural Co-existence

Multicultural Co-existence

"Recognizing the differences in culture between yourself and people of other nationalities and races, and living together while building an equal relationship with them." -Ministry of Internal Affairs and Communication

The Niigata International Association appoints students who are excelling in cultural exchange activities as International Student Exchange Club Members, and supports those activities. This year, we heard from three students about cultural exchange activities in their area and the activities they are planning and carrying out on their own. We asked about some of the things they felt during these activities, focusing on our keyword from the last issue, "multicultural Co-existence".

"Let's make a guide map for living in Kashiwazaki!"

I started as an International Student Exchange Club Member in April of this year. I joined because I wanted to become a bridge between Japan and Uzbekistan by participating in the club activities. I was invited to and attended an event at the beginning of May by the Kashiwazaki Area International Association to help make a guide map for the area.

On the day of the event, representatives who lived and worked in Japan from eight different countries were in attendance -- from Costa Rica, Bangladesh, Uzbekistan and a variety of other countries. We started with some recreation. We played a game where we had a number of pictures and had to guess what country each object pictured was from. It was difficult to predict correctly based on only the small details of the pictures.

For me, the most difficult part of making the guidebook was finding places where Muslims could find Halal food to eat. Islam is the national religion of my home country, Uzbekistan. There are some foods and drinks that Muslims are forbidden from eating or drinking, such as pork and alcohol. Since it's hard to tell whether or not a restaurant is using any pork products in their food, you need to check with the restaurant in advance to be safe. Food that is prepared in accordance with these rules is called "halal." I felt that adding restaurants with this type of food to the guide map would help Muslims have peace of mind when finding food to eat.

- 1 Recreation Time
- 2 Creating the map while talking with others in a relaxed environment
- 3 Certified Halal Mark

We split into two groups of eight to create the map. We shared our knowledge with each other and created the map over the course of about two hours. The map had both English and Japanese -- since many exchange students aren't comfortable with Japanese, we felt English was very important. And with the 2020 Olympics coming soon, I am hopeful the map will become a resource for the many Muslims who will be visiting Japan.

I made many friends through this event and learned a lot as well. I'm hoping to continue to attend these cultural exchange events, learn more about others, and further strengthen the relationship between my home country of Uzbekistan and Japan in the future.

Anvarjonov Hbboskhon

Uzbekistan
Niigata Sangyo University, Economics Department, 2nd Year (Kashiwazaki City)

Enrolled in a Japanese University to study economics after graduating from a language school in Tokyo in 2018. In addition to working as a tutor for foreign exchange students, Anvarjonov is in an acting club and is currently learning Japanese buyo (dancing).

International Exchange Camp in Tainai

When I received the letter about the International Exchange camp in Tainai from NIA, the first thing that caught my eye was the Murakami City History Tour. I take a train bound for Murakami every day on my way to my university, but I had never been to Murakami and wanted to go eventually. The camp was held in Tainai, where my college campus is, and I was able to deepen my understanding of other cultures through international exchange while learning with the Japanese middle and high school students.

The thing that remains in my memory the most from the two days and one night is the Murakami City History Tour and the meet-and-greet event. For the tour, we broke into groups and talked about the places we wanted to go, and then traveled freely from place to place. Since I was meeting everyone in my group for the first time, I was a little anxious, but as we spoke my anxiety lessened and we were able to have a lively discussion. I walked around Murakami while talking with the other students about our interests and experiences we have had in Japan and Korea. It was a humid day with a temperature over 30 degrees Celsius, but it was so fun I didn't even feel the heat. We visited a store called Kikkawa during the tour and the clerk gave us a deep explanation about salmon. We not only saw salmon, but we also touched them and tasted them. We also saw a video of the history of Murakami's festivals at the Murakami History Museum and deepened our understanding of the city. I felt like I had more fun learning about Niigata during the tour with the students.

After the tour ended, there was a networking event with all of the participants to help us learn more about the culture in each other's countries. Each exchange student spoke about their country for 15 minutes, and then answered questions. I wore a chima and jeogori (a traditional

- 1 Just about to set out on the history tour in Murakami
- 2 Learning about salmon production in Murakami at Kikkawa

Korean bottom and top) during my presentation. It had been a while since I had worn them, so I wasn't sure how I looked and was a bit embarrassed.

But after the presentation, many of the Japanese students approached me and asked to take pictures with me, told me how pretty the clothes were, or said they wanted to try one on too. I was very happy that everyone was so interested in my clothes.

I spoke about Korea, but I was naïve to think it would be easy to present about just because it was my home country. I struggled with explaining things clearly while presenting. There were also a number of deep questions during the question and answers part, such as what the meaning of our flag was, and being unable to answer, I found myself shocked. It was a difficult experience.

On the other hand, I was able to see a bit how people from other countries view Korea, and it was a very valuable experience. Up until then, I had felt like I wanted others to about the culture and language of Korea and I naively felt I knew a lot about those things, but I realized I knew less than I thought. I want to continue to study hard both to learn more about my home country, and to learn more about other cultures through international exchange.

Kim Seohyeon

Korea
Niigata Agro-Food University, Food Industry Department, 2nd Year (Tainai City)

Having previously been a student at the same university, Kim Seohyeon began her life as an exchange student in Niigata last year. She started an international cultural exchange circle (ICEC) at her university for exchange students and local Japanese students, and plans events with other exchange Students.

Malaysian Cooking

- 1 Preparing all the ingredients in advance
- 2 Completed nasi lemak. The oval-shaped fried object on the side is a curry puff.

I've attended a variety of cultural exchange events since being made a member of the International Student Exchange Club in April of last year. In addition to interacting with people in the area and Japanese students, I've also been planning and executing events. One of these was a Malaysian cooking class at the Nishi-chiku Community Center in Uchinomachi.

I held the Malaysian cooking class because I wanted to show the appeal of Malaysian food to Japanese people. Many people's image of Malaysian food is that it has a lot of spices and is very spicy, but a lot of the cooking involves coconut milk or sugar, meaning spicy and sweet foods are common. I thought that these sweet and spicy foods might be better for people who aren't able to eat spicy things.

In order to make sure the taste would be consistent, I had a tasting before the event so that Japanese people could try the food. I wrote down the steps I used to create the food to make a recipe. There were also some other non-Japanese participants, so I made a copy of the recipe in English too. The hardest part of the preparation was reserving the space. I wasn't sure there would be anywhere near my school to hold the event, but a Japanese acquaintance of mine had held a similar event at the Nishi-chiku Community Center, so they helped me by reserving the space.

It rained the morning of the event, but 10 and more people including those from Malaysia attended. The participants broke into groups and followed the recipe to make two of the most representative Malaysian foods, nasi lemak and curry puffs. The sweetness and spiciness of the food varied from group to group, but each group tried each other's food and we were able to have a fun meal together.

I realized through the event that food is one of the simplest and most everyday things we do, and one of the most effective ways to learn about another culture is to learn about them through their food. A food class as a way to learn about other cultures is easy to do and everyone enjoys it. I'm looking forward to continuing cultural activities in the future.

The Foreign Resident Consultation Center of Niigata is Open!

On October 1st, 2019, the Foreign Resident Consultation Center of Niigata opened to provide information and consultations for foreign residents about their problems in a variety of languages. There are currently 17,675 foreign residents in Niigata (as of June 2019 per a report by the Ministry of Justice), an increase of about 2,000 from the year before. Looking at the data by nationality, the number of Vietnamese nationals has increased rapidly, overtaking China as the second most populous group in the prefecture. Because of this situation, we are prepared to accept consultations in 7 languages with interpreters (including Chinese and Vietnamese) and other languages with the help of interpretation software.

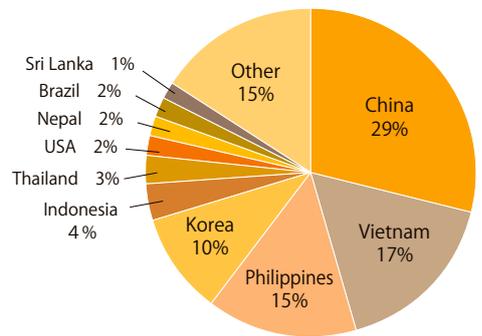

Because the scope of interpretations has a wide range including labor, education, healthcare, and welfare, we cooperate with public services and specialists, and our consultation coordinators can quickly connect you to the right place to resolve your problem. We also have specialists come in periodically for some of the more common consultation topics, such as visas, legal consultations, and education for children.

Everyone at the center is working hard every day to improve our ability to handle consultations through training and by researching new materials. The center has a bright orange theme, so please come anytime!

By using interpreters and other interpretation software, we can handle consultations in a total of 74 languages.

Nguyen Thi Thu Ha

Began working at East Japan Welfare Management Service Corporation in April 2019. Thu Ha had an interest in Japanese and wanted to live overseas (away from her parents) and came Japan right after graduating high school. After studying at a language school in Niigata, she studied economics at Niigata Sangyo University for four years. Her favorite food is sushi, and her favorite sushi is engawa (the edge of a flounder's fin).

We're coming to visit you!

Let's check out a COMPANY!

In this column, we interview foreign nationals employed in companies in Niigata. We look at the cultural differences in work cultures, how the person is fitting in to the company and the community as an individual and see their hard work in action.

This time, we visited the East Japan Welfare Management Service Corporation.

Introducing Nguyen Thi Thu Ha From Vietnam

—Tell us about your current job.

The East Japan Welfare Management Service Corporation Group is taking in a class of 18 Vietnamese technical interns for the first time in 2020. I work for the human resources / communications division, so my job is to offer support for them so they can work without any issues. I am doing a variety of preparation before they arrive, including making a manual for them about living in Japan.

—What other duties do you have, besides helping the technical support interns?

In addition to the manual, I'm also helping the employees at the facility that is going to be taking the interns in to make sure they know what to do. I visit periodically to let them know more about the new interns and when they will arrive, in addition to communicating about other things.

Recently we held a send-off party in Vietnam for the incoming interns. In addition to interpreting between Japanese and Vietnamese, I also presented about our company in Vietnamese. I was very nervous, but I was also happy to meet the new interns.

—What times do you feel are the most fun at your job?

I am most happy anytime I get to use my knowledge or things I've learned up until now to help others. Also whenever anyone else is happy because of how I've done my job.

—What are the hardest things at your job?

Japanese. (She laughs.) I've had to put together a lot of paperwork since starting, and I check on the internet as I work to make sure I use the right words. I also have my seniors check my work before submitting it. I also study Japanese through my work.

—You sound like you're working hard! What was the biggest change between working and your life as a student?

The biggest change was in my own way of thinking. When I was a student, I always felt like I was only responsible for myself, and if I made a mistake it was mine to deal with. Working now, I've realized that I have to think about how my actions effect those around me, and that I have to behave properly.

—How do you spend your holidays?

Recently I've been attending international exchange events. There's a Vietnamese cooking event called "Betoaji" that I've been attending. A few days ago we made banh xeo, which is a Vietnamese dish similar to Japanese okonomiyaki, and yogurt black sticky rice pudding.

—Tell us about some of your goals for the future.

I want to do my best at my job. I want to do my best to make sure our interns feel happy to be at our company. And I want to help them see not just the benefits of their job, but also the charms of Japan and of Niigata, and help them find opportunities to experience them.

—Do you have any words for exchange students looking to find jobs in Japan?

Since you already made it this far, try to actively talk to others and interact with them. You'll meet many people and your chance for a job will come. Just take one step forward and meet others. I'm also going to challenge myself to work hard at my job.

Thank you for your kindness!

This piece was suggested by director Keisuke Kubota. He has worked to both open and operate care facilities and has helped develop a total of 50 of them in Niigata and the Kanto region.

The company first started recruiting employees of foreign nationalities last year, starting with Ms. Thu Ha. Mr. Kubota said "At first, I felt like I had to act like they were the same as the Japanese employees. But working together with them, I found that they had no need to change their personalities or culture. I started to feel like I should accept them as they are, and if they have a new opinion, that I should work to incorporate that into our business." Speaking about working with those of other nationalities, Mr. Kubota said "I feel motivated to grow, and you can see the results. I enjoy working with them."

Enjoying Niigata in the Spring International Student Correspondent -Team BEGIN-

Three foreign exchange students living away from their homes introduce their favorite places to see cherry blossoms in the spring!

📍 Niigata City

If you want to do something fun in Japan in the spring, it has to be the cherry blossoms. In Niigata City, there are a number of great places to see them. My recommendation is Hakusan Shrine. The Hakusan Festival is held during the time when you can see the cherry blossoms, so you can enjoy them both at the same time. The Yasuragi-tei of the Shinano River is also close by, so you can enjoy the festival and then walk along the river to see the cherry blossoms all the way to Bandai. It makes for a great walk. You can also see the cherry blossoms lit up at night. It's easy to get there from Niigata Station, so please check it out!

That said, the shrine is a very famous place for the cherry blossoms, so a lot of people will be there – it may be hard to take your time and look. If that happens to you, why not look for your own place to see them? Last year, I went to see the cherry blossoms near the grounds of an elementary school in the town where I live. Try to find your own place to see the cherry blossoms this year! It can still be cold in April in Niigata, so make sure to check the weather before heading out!

📍 Gosen City

My name is Saya, and I am from Kazakhstan, which is in the middle of Eurasia. I'm studying for my MBA at the Graduate Institute for Entrepreneurial Studies in Niigata. I like to travel, take pictures, and sing. It's my second year in Niigata, and I've been to all sorts of places in the prefecture. I'm confident I'm enjoying Niigata more than anyone!

I love Niigata, and I especially love Niigata's spring, because you can see beautiful flowers everywhere in the prefecture. The cherry blossoms bloom around April, and it's fun to walk under the trees at Hakusan Shrine or along the Yasuragi-tei or to watch them while you think. Mid-April is also the time when you can see one of Niigata's symbols, tulips. In Gosen, which is one of the places tulips are grown, there's a tulip festival every year. A field of over one and a half million tulips blooms like a colorful rug – it's beautiful! Then in May, the wisterias begin blossoming at the Northern Culture Museum in Niigata City. You can enjoy some time underneath the giant wisteria trellis. I love spending some time to enjoy the flowers. I would love for everyone else to have a nice journey to see some of the beautiful flowers this year!

📍 Joetsu City

I've come to appreciate the change of seasons in Niigata while studying as an exchange student at Nagaoka University. In the summer I went to the ocean, which I had never seen in my home country of Mongolia, in the fall I saw the fall foliage, and in the harsh winter I felt like I was home in Mongolia. I enjoy seeing the seasons pass in Niigata.

But of all of those, the way Niigata looks in the spring is what I remember the most. Last year, I went with my friends to the Takada Cherry Blossom Festival, held in Takada Park in Joetsu. There were tons of cherry blossoms blooming in the park, and I had never see anything so beautiful in my life. I enjoyed not only the cherry blossoms, but also the booths and the fireworks. I had a great time with my friends from the afternoon to the evening while enjoying the cherry blossoms. I'm hoping to invite my parents to Japan this spring if I can. If my parents come to Niigata, I'm going to take them to the Takada Cherry Blossom Festival. My mother loves flowers, so I'm sure she would enjoy experiencing the beautiful cherry blossoms in Niigata. I want my parents to take a lot of pictures and enjoy the feeling of watching the cherry blossoms.

We held our 2019 Exchange Student Job Search Support Seminar!

On November 1st, 2019, we held our 2019 Exchange Student Job Search Support Seminar to help exchange students looking for jobs in Japan to learn basic information about jobs, interview manners, and work visas. The event was held at Toki Messe, and was attended by 82 students, 12 related planners, and 18 people from companies.

In the first lecture, "Japanese Job Searching – Basic Knowledge for Exchange Students," we heard from Yuko Mizushina of Hello Work Niigata's New Graduate Assistance division about the rules of searching for a job in Japan and interview manners.

In the second lecture, "Visas for Exchange Students Looking for Jobs," Daisuke Yasumoto of the Tokyo Regional Immigration gave a simple explanation about visas for looking for a job, and about entering jobs at a Japanese company.

In the second half of the seminar, we had participating business introduce themselves. Each company gave an overview of their operations and what kind of employees they were looking for. The companies were in business like recruiting, care for the elderly, machinery manufacturing, printing, sales, and lodging. At the networking event after the seminar, students asked questions to business they were interested in, and talked and exchanged information freely.

We held our 2019 Foreign Resident Emergency Support Training!

On December 8th, we held our 2019 Foreign Resident Emergency Support Training at Toki Messe, with 40 people attending (including three from other countries).

The first half was a lecture on the theme of "Activities to Support Foreign Residents during Emergencies: Trajectory of the Chuetsu Earthquake" by Kazuhiko Takagi, Deputy Representative Director of NPO Multicultural Symbiosis Manager National Council. He spoke about the importance of providing adequate information for foreigners during disasters by putting easy-to-understand symbols on places like evacuation areas and the importance of making relationships with people in the area.

In the second half, two advisors spoke about the differences between responding to earthquakes and floods and about using "Easy Japanese" when helping foreigners, after which each group spoke about eight examples related to "Disseminating Information and Consultation Methods during Disasters," sharing brought thoughts and methods to handle problems. The participants all shared opinions from their positions.

2019 International Understanding Presentation Contest

We held the 14th International Understanding Presentation Contest on December 21st, 2019, at a conference room in Toki Messe (the Marine Hall). This year there were 9 teams in the junior high school category and 11 in the high school category, and they spoke about world topics such as poverty, environmental issues, and multiculturalism, presenting the findings of their research and investigation from their own viewpoints. This year, many groups focused on the problems with plastic waste, and many felt their knowledge about realizing a more sustainable society grew.

The Highest Award of Excellence in the junior high school category went to AB5, a team from Murakami City Arakawa Junior High School, who presented ideas for international cooperation using pagne fabrics from Benin in West Africa, and the Highest Award of Excellence in the high school category went to HITOSHEEEEEZ, a team from Joetsu High School spoke about different value systems around the world, and spoke at length about deepening multicultural understanding through understanding these differences. These two winners will be going on a study tour in Taiwan at the end of March.

iHOLA! from the JICA Niigata Desk

Hi! I am Yui Miya, and I took over the JICA Niigata Desk from last October.

When I was in college, I fell in love with the beautiful ocean and set foot in a developing country for the first time in the Republic of Palau. This was my first time in a developing country, and the only image I had was a negative one that it would be economically poorer than Japan. But arriving, it was completely different – I was moved by the free way the people there lived. I continued on to graduate school to learn more about international cooperation and wanting to know more about the people who lived in other countries, I went to Ecuador as a Japan Overseas Cooperation Volunteer without any experience working. I helped with ethical education for elementary and middle schoolers.

I had many fun and difficult experiences in Ecuador. In the two years, I felt like the people around me helped me as much or more than I helped them. I became friends with many people who had a different background than me, and I felt deeply that people of all countries will come and work together if we don't put up walls between each other.

I'm looking forward to helping everyone to understand how big the world is and how much fun international exchange can be through my position with JICA!
